Report From the Monthly Business and Dinner Meeting of the CASACC

1. Opening Remarks

The esteemed monthly meeting, initially scheduled with high hopes, commenced in a symphony of spicy aromas and sliding tabletops. While the intended guest list boasted a robust 10 attendees, the final turnout of two stalwart members led to a gathering of unparalleled intimacy and—let’s face it—uncontrollable awkwardness. Fortunately for the establishment there was a steady stream of other dine-in and take-out customers so it appears that restaurant is accepted into the community.

2. Attendance Debacle

It is with great regret that the meeting must report an attendance rating officially classified as “poor.” Sources suggest this disaster may stem from the rescheduling to a Friday—a decision made to accommodate the ever-elusive Member Nate Deems, who, in a plot twist befitting a daytime soap opera, declined at the eleventh hour. The Reds’ Thursday defeat (now being labeled a regional day of mourning) only deepened the woes. Consequently, the group adopted a resolution: reschedule dates sparingly, with Reds’ Opening Day now etched firmly into the “not a holiday, stop pretending” category. As poetic justice, Member Deems has been unanimously volunteered to serve as President for April 2025. Congratulations, Mr. President.

3. Food and Venue Review

While the attendance broke hearts, the food mended them. Maharaja’s offerings of piping-hot papadoms, delicious chutneys, and perfectly balanced spice levels received glowing reviews. The venue, a reincarnated Cincinnati chili house, charmed attendees with Bollywood videos and a surprisingly aromatic restroom—a highlight noted by Member Holley with great enthusiasm and more than a hint of surprise. The glass tabletops, however, proved to be a health hazard as they skated across the tablecloths (which were, unfortunately, of questionable cleanliness). The papadoms were not complimentary, but given the turnout's calamitous scale, the President deemed it too embarrassing to negotiate. Solidarity was demonstrated by the remaining two attendees bravely consuming enough to justify the initial reservation of ten.

4. New Signage

In a burst of productivity, the group unveiled new table top signs for the President and Member Allen Patten. These were presented with great fanfare (or, at least, the muted enthusiasm typical of two diners).

5. Final Impressions and Recommendations

Despite the challenges, attendees rated the venue a solid 7.85, a score reflecting the culinary triumphs and Bollywood nostalgia but docked for sliding tabletops and dirty tablecloths. The venue is recommended for a future visit, assuming the glass tabletops are tamed and reservations are made in smaller leaps of optimism.

In closing, the meeting combined gastronomic delight, logistical fiascos, and one Member's swift ascendancy to the presidency—proof that even small gatherings can yield big moments.

Final Score:

- Venue: 7.85
- Attendance: 2 (a bold rounding up)

The saga continues in April, under President Nate Deems. Good luck to all involved. May your meetings be plentiful and your attendance not a punchline.
